WLF Urges Ninth Circuit to Rehear Important Securities Case

(E. Ohman J:or Fonder AB v. NVIDIA Corp.)

“The panel majority’s opinion, if allowed to stand, would reopen the floodgates to the same litigation abuses that led Congress to enact the PSLRA’s heightened pleading standard in the first place.”

WASHINGTON, DC—Washington Legal Foundation (WLF) today urged the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to rehear a sharply divided panel decision that gutted the critical pleading requirements of the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act (PSLRA). WLF’s amicus brief was drafted with pro bono assistance from James N. Kramer, Daniel A. Rubens, and Jodie C. Liu of Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP. The National Association of Manufacturers joined WLF on the brief.

The case arises from plaintiffs’ claim that NVIDIA should have told investors that a substantial portion of its gaming revenue was derived from sales to cryptocurrency miners rather than gamers. But plaintiffs lacked any data showing that this was true, much less that NVIDIA’s executives knew it was true. So plaintiffs hired an expert to create data relying on undisclosed and unreliable assumptions, then asserted that NVIDIA’s executives should have known about this made-up data. Concluding that plaintiffs’ allegations did not plausibly state a claim under the PSLRA, the district court dismissed the suit, but a divided Ninth Circuit panel reversed.

In its amicus brief urging rehearing, WLF explained why the panel majority’s reliance on plaintiffs’ hired-gun expert report to establish falsity and scienter runs afoul of existing Ninth Circuit case law and decisions from other circuits. If left in place, the panel majority’s ruling creates an easy roadmap for future plaintiffs to engage in the kind of fishing expeditions the PSLRA was supposed to end.
