After years of opposing arbitration as a way to resolve disputes, some plaintiffs' lawyers have flipped the script to deploy arbitration demands on a mass scale. This tactic utilizes existing litigation tools, such as client solicitation, lead generation, consumer class actions, and litigation funding. Mass-arbitration requests trigger substantial private arbitration fees which plaintiffs use as settlement leverage. Our panelists will draw upon decades of tort-law and arbitration experience to discuss current mass-arbitration models, defense responses and risk mitigation, and recent developments in federal courts and arbitration providers.
